Industrialised agriculture. Case-in-point: Gruber goes on to say "First, modern industrial agriculture, where it would cost the farmer $30 or $40 per acre to grow corn, for instance, to buy the corn at $1.50 a bushel and then sell it at $3 or $4, it's a much more inefficient process, even at $3 or $4. We want to transform the landscape so that we can get farmers to start thinking of farming not for the short term, but as a way to feed a small village for its children and not just in the narrow confines of their own farm..." Gruber quotes "...agriculture needs to become a service industry, not only of the United States but of the world, and we need to make the food we eat available at the lowest possible cost, in order to provide basic food to everyone." Gruber is as passionate about the subject as some. He believes that, "The history of humanity is that a terrible poverty, as a result of which tens of millions of children were dying, has ultimately been relieved by agriculture." – Professor Gruber. Jonathan Gruber, a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been at the center of a controversy over his economic theories and consulting firm's recommendations to the federal government, including the Affordable Care Act. MIT economist Jonathan Gruber was at the heart of the health care debate. "It is ultimately a core tenant of free markets that we need to have competition to get the best price, and it's not clear that we've actually achieved that in the U.S., in terms of actually getting the best price. "The Affordable Care Act is trying to address that, but the Affordable Care Act is hugely complex." Gruber was one of the main architects of the legislation. The Affordable Care Act, or "ObamaCare", is what critics call Ohamacare. On January 24, 2014, the Supreme Court announced that it would take on the case of King v. Burwell f678ea9f9e
