View Full Caption Getty Images/File Photo CHICAGO — Former President Barack Obama endorsed his former secretary of health and human services in her run for a seat in the U.S. House. Amy Klobuchar, the Minnesota Democrat, defeated Republican Rep. Jim Hagedorn in the closely watched race in the 8th Congressional District, according to a statement released by the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee. Obama said he backed Klobuchar because "her experience, her determination, her vision for Minnesota and our country make her the best person to be our next representative in Congress." Klobuchar thanked Obama for his support. "I'm honored to have his endorsement, and I will always be grateful for his support and advice during my time as senator and first lady," Klobuchar said. "Now, I'm excited to start working with him again to move Minnesota forward." Obama won the district in 2008. Hagedorn ran unopposed in 2014. The district includes the city of St. Paul and much of the suburbs and rural areas, stretching from the cities of Minneapolis and Bloomington to the Twin Cities. Obama won the race against Republican nominee Mitt Romney in 2012, 46.7 percent to 43.8 percent. Klobuchar was appointed to the Senate by then-Gov. Mark Dayton in July 2013 after three-term incumbent Al Franken resigned over sexual harassment allegations. She won a special election for Franken's seat in 2014, defeating Republican Karin Housley 48 82157476af
